Message from JCA CEO, Courtney Bernardi

Every business is different. Not all small businesses are the same and the same can be said for medium to large businesses. Because of this, we are striving to break out groups within businesses that have commonalities.

Our first breakout group happened to be one of our most important groups, the restaurants. Although considered small business, restaurants are more unique than any other retail business. Staffing is different, needs are different and the resources we can provide are often different. Because of this, the Johns Creek Restaurant Forum was created. A way for restaurant owners/operators to come together to share best practices, voice concerns, develop partnerships and to share with JCA what resources we could provide to better assist this vital part of our business community. The group meets regularly and developed the idea behind Johns Creek Restaurant Week and has begun to lean on one another for assistance. And, we have learned how to better serve this growing and unique sector.

Because we appreciate the uniqueness of different parts of business, we are creating more forums to better serve all Johns Creek businesses. Human Resource professionals are a group of individuals that we feel we can learn from and certainly that can learn from one another. With companies like Alcon and Ebix leading the way, we are hosting a new HR forum for HR professionals in Johns Creek. Our hope is to learn more about our current workforce issues and to bring beneficial resources and partners to the table to develop initiatives to strengthen our workforce pipeline.

We hope to continue our reach by fostering more group forum interaction, more ways for our businesses to learn from each other and to encourage and strengthen the direct line of communication between our business community and resources providers.

If two heads are better than one, many minds can be exceptional.
