Partner, Robbins Ross Alloy Belinfante Littlefield LLC

Vincent Russo is an attorney at the law firm of Robbins Ross Alloy Belinfante Littlefield LLC in Atlanta, Georgia. Vincent generally focuses his practice on the overall business needs of his clients, while specializing in corporate governance, securities law, business and government litigation, and public policy. Vincent has significant experience serving as outside general counsel to his clients involved in complex business transactions that implicate federal and state securities laws and other regulatory schemes. Vincent is also a leading practitioner in the fields of election law and voting rights, and he has served as legal counsel to clients in voting rights litigation, candidate challenges, and campaign finance and other election-related matters.

From 2008 through September 2013, Vincent was the General Counsel at the Georgia Secretary of State's Office, where he served as chief legal counsel to Secretaries of State Brian Kemp and Karen Handel. Vincent also served as Georgia's Assistant Commissioner of Securities beginning in 2010. In that role, he oversaw securities investigations and enforcement actions of the State of Georgia and the development of the state's current securities regulatory framework, including Georgia's intrastate crowdfunding exemption - the Invest Georgia Exemption.

Vincent is active in the community and the bar, among other things, and he also serves as a court-appointed Special Master in real estate disputes in Fulton County, Georgia. Vincent is a graduate of Emory University School of Law and received undergraduate degrees in Economics and Political Science from Louisiana State University.
